

High Protein High Energy Plant-Based Alternatives

High protein and/or high energy plant-based alternatives is not intended to replace generic high protein and/or high energy dietary recommendations. Instead, this resource provides additional information on plant-based alternatives to help achieve increased energy and protein requirements.

☐ You are underweight
☐ You are losing weight without trying
☐ You are unable to eat enough due to poor appetite or nausea
☐ You have increased energy and protein requirements

Alternative high protein and/or high energy diet is useful when:

Alternative high energy foods include:

- Avocado
- Nuts and seeds (including chia, linseed, sunflower, and pepita seeds, etc)
- Oils (including olive, coconut, peanut, canola, avocado, walnut, etc)
- Nut & seed butters (e.g. peanut, almond, cashew, tahini)
- Soy, rice, coconut (canned),
 macadamia, peanut, and oat milk
- Almond, soy or coconut ice cream/yoghurt/cream
- Nut based cheese (including soy cheese, etc)
- Dried fruit
- Fruit juice, smoothies or bowls
- Dark chocolate

- Bliss balls
- Dips (e.g. hummus, tahini)

Alternative high protein foods include:

- Legumes
- Beans
- Quinoa
- Lupin flakes
- Nuts
- Nut butters
- Meat alternatives (e.g. tofu, tempeh, edamame, falafel, etc)
- Nutritional yeast
- Soy and pea milk
- Soy yoghurt

General tips of how to achieve high protein and/or high energy goals/requirements:

- Eat more regularly (e.g. 6 times per day, every 2-3 hours)
- Always carry snacks (e.g. nuts, bliss balls, dried fruit, etc)
- Fortify* meals and snacks
- Prepare large batches of meals to freeze leftovers for a later date
- Keep favourite foods and snacks in the pantry/fridge/freezer
- Look for all opportunities to make the most of every mouthful by adding extra nutrition to meals and snacks
- Aim to include 1 2 milk/milk alternative drinks daily
